We cordially invite you to participate in the University of Groningen Workshop “Automation and Well-being.” Robots and AI now perform tasks, such as surgeries, automobile assembly, and management. While new technologies may increase productivity and replace dangerous or dull tasks, they can also have a dark side. For example, beyond their labor-saving element, the new technologies may negatively influence mental health or lead to new forms of surveillance and algorithmic management that hurt workers' well-being.

We would like to bring together scientists from various disciplines in a collaborative one-day hybrid symposium on the well-being implications of automation. We strive to encourage interdisciplinary dialogue on the topic and form a research consortium to apply for third-party funding.

During the workshop, you have the opportunity to attend various interdisciplinary presentations at the intersection of technology and well-being, engage in interactive discussions, meet with the speakers and other participants, and form new collaborations. We hope to see you there!

The invited presenters include:

Aleid Brouwer (University of Groningen)

Fulvio Castellacci (University of Oslo)

Justin Doran (Cork University Business School)

Jenny van Doorn (University of Groningen)

Gudela Grote (ETH Zurich)

Anthony Lepinteur (University of Luxembourg)

Piotr Lewandowski (Institute for Structural Research, IBS)

Samuele Murtinu (University of Utrecht)
