For most students the years at university is a period in which major changes take place, a time when they are confronted with existential questions, a formative time in their lives. But sometimes they hardly get an opportunity to really come to grips with it: many students rush through their courses because of the pressure to graduate with a minimum of delay. It is understandable that students get stuck and feel they are floundering, sometimes leading to unpleasant consequences for their health and their studies.

Students who suffer from psychological complaints affecting their studies can consult a psychologist at the SSC. You may also find yourself struggling with questions that require understanding and a ‘listening ear’ rather than psychological treatment. In these cases it can be a great help just to be able to tell your story to someone outside your own circle, e.g. to an ‘All Ears’ student worker.

‘All Ears’ student workers are not students themselves, but they are in close contact with students through their professional or personal background. Hence, a student worker has an intimate knowledge of the kind of problems ‘being a student’ entails. A talk with one of our student workers is low-threshold and without obligation, so you can drop by anytime without an appointment. Everything you discuss with them remains completely confidential.
