Jean-Pierre Meunier's Les structures de l'expérience filmique: L'identification filmique from 1969 is a key text in the history of film studies.

Drawing on the work of the French pioneers of phenomenology, Maurice Merleau-Ponty and Jean-Paul Sartre, as well as on the insights of the French Filmology movement, Meunier distinguishes between three major types of engagements viewers can have with moving images: the fiction attitude, documentary attitude and home movie attitude. With this seemingly innocuous distinction, Meunier opens up a new field of inquiry. By adding the home movie attitude as the third type of engagement, he integrates a large and long-neglected type of cinematic practice into the field of film studies and film theory, namely the non-theatrical non-fiction film.

Meunier's pioneering gesture continues to reverberate throughout film studies, where non-theatrical film has become one of the main areas of research over the last decade.

Furthermore, Meunier addresses the much-discussed concepts of filmic identification and movement in a way that continues to be relevant to current developments in film philosophy and film aesthetics.

Through the readings proposed by Vivian Sobchack, Dudley Andrew and others, Meunier's work has been an important influence on the development of film theory outside of the French-speaking world over the last decades. However, the full text of Meunier's book has never been available in any language but French.
