Acknowledgements

While bearing my name as sole author, the chapters in this book are largely a collective undertaking and would not exist without the support and assistance of a large number of people. Foremost I thank Jakob de Haan, who brought this PhD project under my attention and invited me to apply. His straightforward way of supervising has been most helpful, his advice invaluable for completing this book and the many informal Groningen dinners most pleasant.

I am most thankful to Robert Lensink for the opportunity of learning from him. In particular, I owe gratitude to him for his guidance with the empirical work in this book. His dedication to both theory and empirical research has inspired me in the various papers we worked on together. On a more personal level, I thank him for the fruitful research meetings at his home in Annen and the pleasant hours we spend at the SUERF conference in Tallinn and the Tor Vergata Conference in Rome.

I wish to thank Bert Scholtens for his assistance during my PhD-project and his proposal to write a joint-paper for the International Finance Review. I also thank Bert for his many valuable remarks on the several other studies, which make up this dissertation.

My appreciation goes out to Aljan Meesters for being a great research partner and colleague. What started out as two people having interest in the same data set, turned into a fruitful teamwork, which resulted in a rather adventurous and successful trip to the 2006 Prague EIASM conference.

I am grateful to Lammertjan Dam for the exchange of ideas and experiences when we both started out as PhD students. I was lucky to share my office at Zernike with Remco van der Molen, thanks for being a great colleague and office mate and for the experience of being paranimph. I would like to thank Suwarni and Barka for their valuable help with the information technology, I thank Grietje Pol for her secretarial assistance and I thank Ellen and other members of the SOM Research School for being most accessible and helpful. I also thank the research school for providing me with the financial means to collect data from foreign banks throughout Europe.

With great pleasure I take the opportunity to express my gratitude to Martine, Rutger, Martien, Hellen, Petr, Joop, Stamatís, Roan, Meindert and Nick for sharing ideas and for being such great individuals to know. Also, I want to express my deep appreciation for the guidance of my mother for the assistance of my father, and for the invaluable friendship and understanding with Menno and Hijko. Directly or indirectly you all contributed to the realisation of this book.

The chapters in this book benefited substantially from the input of researchers and anonymous referees, who helped ameliorating its content. I am grateful for comments and suggestions by Allen Berger, Abe de Jong, Luca Papi, Linda Toolsema, Katharina Steiner, Elmer Sterken, Semti Yildirim, Laurent Weill, participants of the Lodz 2003...
Open Minds Conference, participants of the Groningen SOM 2003 EU Enlargement Conference, participants of the Rome 2004 XIII Tor Vergata Conference, participants of the Århus 2004 PhD Workshop on Banking and Financial Markets by Mark Flannery, participants of the Prague 2006 EIASM Workshop on Financial Market Development in Central and Eastern European countries, and participants of several seminars and PhD conferences organized by the SOM Research School Groningen.

Part of the research was conducted abroad. I owe many thanks to bankers from ABN AMRO Bank, ING Bank, KBC, HVB Group/BACA, ERSTE Bank, Raiffeisen International, Swedbank, SEB and SAMPO Bank, their subsidiaries in Estonia, the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland, and staff of Eesti Pank, Česká Národní Banka, Rahoitustarkastus, Finansinspektionen, Narodowy Bank Polski, Magyar Nemzeti Bank and the Oesterreichische Nationalbank for their time and effort to cooperate in this research project. The project was undertaken in cooperation with the Dutch central bank. I thank Ralph de Haas for his help in coordinating the meetings and his assistance in structuring the data.

Another part of the research was conducted with bank specific data from BankScope, which combines data from Fitch Ratings with other sources. I thank Bob Vaanhold and Mark Wessels at Bureau van Dijk Electronic Publishing in Amsterdam for providing me with additional information and data when I needed it.
