Sexuality education in Uganda

de Haas, Billie

IMPORTANT NOTE: You are advised to consult the publisher's version (publisher's PDF) if you wish to cite from it. Please check the document version below.

Document Version
Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Publication date:
2017

Link to publication in University of Groningen/UMCG research database

Citation for published version (APA):

Copyright
Other than for strictly personal use, it is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Take-down policy
If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Downloaded from the University of Groningen/UMCG research database (Pure): http://www.rug.nl/research/portal. For technical reasons the number of authors shown on this cover page is limited to 10 maximum.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

According to my aunt Ineke, this research topic was destined to be because in Primary school I wrote my assignment about Siamese cats and went an extra mile to provide a detailed description of their mating process. I don’t know whether it was destiny but I do know that, at age eighteen, I was determined to study Demography. Once enrolled in Population Studies, I was particularly moved by the consequences of the HIV epidemic in sub-Saharan Africa. I reasoned that sexuality education was an important strategy in the response to AIDS, and this was when Inge, my supervisor, contacted Henk, who worked at World Population Foundation. In that moment, the story of my PhD research started. Inge and Henk, I am very grateful for all the opportunities you have given me. You make a great team!

Inge, I admire your work, vision, intelligence, work ethics and achievements. I am always very proud to tell others that you are my supervisor. Whenever I would be in doubt about research ethics, I would always be guided by the ‘What would Inge do’-principle, knowing the answer would lead me into the right direction. During our meetings, your difficult -very, very open...- questions could rack my brain, especially those question marks in the side- lines of my papers... You would return the question mark on my face with a smile but never with the answer. This is a great teaching skill, which I still need to acquire for supervising my students. I have learned a lot from you, and, on top of that, our meetings were always a source of inspiration and motivation which had me happily hop back to my desk to continue my research.

Henk, I think you are one of the sweetest managers anyone could have. You created a work environment where I felt at home, and where I felt comfortable -and was encouraged- to speak my mind. I think this is very special and rare, thank you for making that happen. Jo and Sanderijn, you two have taught me everything there is to know about SRHR and in specific about sexuality education. I regard you as my mentors, especially Sanderijn, whom I was able to join on teacher trainings in Uganda and with whom I could endlessly discuss the findings from my research. Sanderijn, you are an important role model in my life, you have shown me that there is much to aim for and that you can take time to do one thing after the other, rather than wanting to achieve everything at once. Jo, you have taught me not to fear and the real meaning and importance of a rights-based approach. Linette, Rachel, Thilly, Anny and Teun, thank you for all your wisdom, hospitality and support throughout the years. Ciel, thank you for helping me back on track and for your motivational words that ‘even when you are tired, there is always something you can do’. Charles, thank you for always being there for me and for offering your house of peace and silence in the Dutch dunes to finalise my thesis. Joanne, Liesbeth and Ellen, thank you for making me part of the WSWM team. Suzy, Yuri, Noor, and all other Rutgers colleagues, thank you for being such welcoming and inspirational colleagues!

Daniel and Allen, you two warmly welcomed me in Uganda and ensured that I felt at home in this new place and as part of SchoolNet Uganda. You literally made sure that I had clothing, a tooth brush and a place to stay, you included me in all activities organised by SchoolNet, and supported me with my research in all other imaginable ways. Allen, you invited me, Vera and Marieke into your home and took us to an introduction in traditional gomesi-wear. You showed me how to respect culture and at the same time be the strongest, independent woman I have ever met. I admire your courage and strength with which you face the difficulties in life and endeavour to improve the lives of the people around you.

Kesh, Vera, Marieke, Jamal and Mark, thank you for being my Ugandan family and for the long nights of playing UNO. Sander and Sarah, thank you for providing me with a home at ICU guesthouse, this has always been a comforting place to return to after intense days of data collection. Sandra and Ester, thank you for introducing me to Uganda's countryside. Vivienne and Kesh, thank you for being my research assistants. Stella, thank you for welcoming me at MISR and for providing feedback on my research proposal. I admire your courage for standing up against the regime for a better Uganda. I hope your efforts will be rewarded and that you will be acknowledged for being the great scientist and activist that you are.

Thank you UNCST for providing ethical clearance for this study to be conducted in Uganda. Zai (Straight Talk Foundation), Miep and Henry (Youth Alive Uganda) and Julie, thank you for supporting my research and for introducing me to teachers in your schools. I also thank the school administrators for warmly welcoming me into their schools. Most of all, I am very grateful to all the students and teachers who participated in this research, who were willing to allocate their time and resources, and who shared their personal experiences, beliefs and struggles with me.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am grateful to the reading committee: Holly, Nyovani and Hinke, for reading my work and for providing me with valuable feedback. Greetje, thank you for all your support and for your guidance in writing the article about young people’s perceptions. Leo and Claartje, thank you for motivating and enabling me to finish my PhD. Aleid, thank you for being my PhD mentor. Christine, thank you for being my wingman when I needed one. Heike, Marieke, Anu, Linden, and all other PRC and FRW colleagues, thank you for your friendship and for thinking along with my research. Geerte, thank you for being my writing buddy in the monastery and beyond.

This PhD research has literally been a journey. Not only because of the distance between Uganda and the Netherlands but also because I was commuting to Groningen. While living in Utrecht, and later in Amsterdam, I first stayed with Marjolein in Groningen two nights a week. Not much later, I stayed with Marjolein and Ingmar, which soon expanded to Marjolein, Ingmar and two cats: Nero and Loki. It was only when baby Lars was making his entrance, that I moved to a new place. I was warmly invited into IJsbrand’s bed. We were co-sharing his room: he would live there during the weekends and I would be there during the week. A very interesting living arrangement, including many enjoyable talks with house mate Wietse, which ended after a few months when IJsbrand returned to live in Groningen full-time. Petra and Arjan then invited me to live with them with the stipulation that I could only stay for a few months because baby Jort was on his way. Then, Ori told me I could stay with him if I was willing to eat his humus, an offer I couldn’t refuse. Only now, it was my turn to get pregnant. My trips to Groningen became less frequent and I would incidentally stay with Lous, Marieke, Marjolein, Jessica, Monique, Jochem and Nynke to work on my dissertation. I want to thank you all, and the other friends I have not mentioned by name, for your hospitality and gezelligheid, I have appreciated this a lot: not only because I enjoyed all our time spent together but also because you have enabled me to write and finish my dissertation.

Zusjes, opa and oma, thank you for being always proud of me. Mama, thank you for turning into ‘Supermama’ and driving me to the quiet places I needed to be to finalise my PhD. Papa, thank you for helping me with the cover and printing of my thesis. Rogier, thank you for designing the cover. Saskia, thank you for designing my book. Jon, thank you for copy-editing my work. You have been very kind to me, even though we have never met in person.

Saskia and Marieke, thank you both for your continuous support and for being my friend and paranymph. Niels and Lenny, I have often been absent because I was working on my dissertation. Thank you for all your patience and support, I look forward to us spending time together on the weekends again!