

University of Groningen

Reconstructing diet, tracing mobility

Panagiotopoulou, Eleni

IMPORTANT NOTE: You are advised to consult the publisher's version (publisher's PDF) if you wish to cite from it. Please check the document version below.

Document Version

Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Publication date:

2018

Link to publication in University of Groningen/UMCG research database

Citation for published version (APA):

Panagiotopoulou, E. (2018). Reconstructing diet, tracing mobility: sopic approach to social change during the transition from the Bronze to the Early Iron Age in Thessaly, Greece. [Groningen]: University of Groningen.

Copyright

Other than for strictly personal use, it is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Take-down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Downloaded from the University of Groningen/UMCG research database (Pure): <http://www.rug.nl/research/portal>. For technical reasons the number of authors shown on this cover page is limited to 10 maximum.

Propositions:

1. The Protogeometric period in Greece is a fascinating period of contrasts, inspiration, and creativity.
2. When someone dies someone else decides the fate of the deceased.
3. A burial for a researcher is so much more than a disposed body in the ground. It is an apotheke of data. Although it contains much more data than initially thought, it also contains less evidence than hoped for.
4. Isotope analyses should be incorporated with the contextual analyses of the burial practices.
5. It is disappointing to discover that the delicious Greek fish meze was missing from the Protogeometric menu.
6. Population mobility always occurred. The question should focus on the extent, the motivations, and the effects of this phenomenon in every historical period.
7. A non-local individual is not always a stranger.
8. A local person can bring the change.
9. What I really missed living in the Netherlands is a Greek salad and grilled meat in a restaurant by the sea.
10. Dutch people are louder, crazier – and more beloved - than Greeks may think.